It is great that Dairyland is working to move toward renewable energy sources. Can you address the negatives to these sources & their negative impact on the environment? Battery production, wind, solar panels, etc. all have negative impacts on the environment. Do the benefits outweigh the negatives?

- a. All generation resources have “pros and cons” – which is why diversification is important for sustainability and reliability. An all-of-the-above approach lets our power supplier, Dairyland Power Cooperative, maximize the pros and minimize the cons for each to best serve Riverland and all Dairyland’s members.
- b. Solar and wind are intermittent – their output depends upon the forces of nature, at any given moment. While “on demand power” is clearly a con for wind and solar, a big pro is that their fuel is free. As fuel costs are often variable and can be one of the biggest expenses any utility faces, free fuel provides a major benefit to the system.
- c. The dependability of wind and solar is lower than fossil-fueled and nuclear energy plants, but their ability to displace higher cost energy generation is valuable. Not only does this reduce costs to consumers, it also reduces fossil fuel price volatility risks to Dairyland.
- d. A diverse resource portfolio benefits system reliability, affordability and the environment. Dairyland will continue its work on maintaining a well-balanced, cost-competitive resource portfolio, while exploring new technologies such as energy storage and advanced nuclear.

What happens when the grants are revoked by D.O.G.E? Will this affect consumers and how? What about the new power lines and the amount of stray voltage affecting life and decreased property value and livestock? And the natural beauty of America?

- a. The Trump Administration has affirmed Dairyland’s $595 million New Empowering Rural America (New ERA) grant award, first announced in September 2024. Please visit our website to view the April 17 news release, which details how this transformative award will benefit Dairyland’s cooperative members and rural communities.
- b. For over 80 years Dairyland, as a non-partisan and not-for-profit cooperative, has successfully worked with Administrations from both parties to deliver on its mission of providing safe, reliable, cost-competitive power to Riverland and all its members. It is common practice for an incoming administration to evaluate current federal programs.
- c. In addition, Dairyland’s commitment to preserving natural resources represents a deeply held view that good environmental practices reflect sound operations and benefit the communities we serve and live in. Ensuring grid reliability, meeting increased energy needs and protecting the environment are integral to Dairyland’s sustainable planning strategy.

Why won’t Riverland join Focus on Energy like other Cooperatives? They offer some better rebates than Riverland.

Riverland has elected to spend energy efficiency money locally through rebate programs administered by Riverland for Riverland members. When a utility contributes to Focus on Energy, their funds are spread throughout the entire state. Please let us know if there are incentives that Focus on Energy offers that we should consider.

For those who installed solar to produce their own electricity, you credit them $0.03 per kW for the extra. How do you justify charging them $1.00 per kW under the new “Demand Charge”? Charging someone 3 times more than you paid for it is quite a profit which begs the question, are you now a for-profit company?

The excess solar energy you generate and return to the grid is compensated at the monthly average peak price for power based on the MISO market. Instead of Riverland paying Dairyland Power Cooperative (our generation and transmission supplier) at the MISO market rate, Riverland is paying the solar member the same price per kWh. In addition to the average MISO peak price, Riverland adds 1.3 cents to every kWh that’s paid back to solar member for capacity charge savings. The $1.00 kW demand charge is applied to all residential rates and is independent of the MISO rate. The demand charge is the capacity contribution each member has to the overall distribution grid. The more stress a member puts on the distribution system, the more they will pay in the kW charge.

What is the current state of radioactive waste from the retired Genoa nuclear power?

- a. The La Crosse Boiling Water Reactor (LACBWR), was a 50 MW nuclear power plant owned and operated by Dairyland in Genoa, Wis. LACBWR was permanently shut down in 1987 and it has been fully decommissioned.
- b. LACBWR’s used nuclear fuel is securely stored on-site in dry cask storage. This method involves placing used fuel in robust, sealed containers. The fuel is monitored around the clock at the Independent Spent Fuel Storage Installation site (ISFSI), in accordance with Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) regulations.
- c. Currently, the United States does not have a permanent repository for used nuclear fuel. Until a solution is established, the used fuel will continue to be safely stored in dry cask storage at the Genoa site.

Congratulations!
